4 THINGS YOU NEED TO KNOW

WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT, REPORTER

Thanks to #MeToo and the women who shared their stories of being sexually assaulted in the workplace — whether by Harvey Weinstein or a whole list of "shi–y media men" — survivors are finally finding a bigger support system, a community more likely to actually believe them when they share their stories. But that wasn't always the case. Kim Warnick was raped three years ago by someone from her company, and she's been telling her story ever since as a way to help other survivors. Now, she'll be walking with survivors and allies alike at the Boston Area Rape Crisis Center's Walk for Change this weekend. Read more on page 4 and at metro.us.

ONE DEAD AFTER ENGINE EXPLODES ON SOUTHWEST FLIGHT

1 An engine on a Dallas-bound Southwest Airlines flight with 149 people aboard apparently exploded on Tuesday, forcing an emergency landing in Philadelphia as one passenger was killed and another one was nearly sucked out a window of the plane, the airline and federal officials said. The fatality on the flight from New York was the first in a U.S. commercial aviation accident since 2009, according to National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB) statistics. After an engine on the plane's left side blew, it threw off shrapnel, shattering a window and causing cabin depressurization that nearly pulled out a female passenger, according to witness accounts and local news media reports. NTSB Chairman Robert Sumwalt told a news briefing in Washington that one person had been killed, but declined to elaborate. The fatality was a passenger, according to Southwest Chairman and Chief Executive Officer Gary Kelly. Sumwalt said the NTSB believes parts came off of the engine but it has not determined if it was an "uncontained engine failure." "There are protection rings around the engine to keep shrapnel from coming out. Even though we believe that there were parts coming out of this engine, it may not have been in that section of the engine that technically would qualify this as an uncontained engine failure," he said. He said the NTSB sees about three or four uncontained engine failures a year, including non-U.S. carriers. Flight 1380 was diverted to Philadelphia after crew members reported damage to an engine, the fuselage and at least one window, the Federal Aviation Administration said. "Everybody was going crazy, and yelling and screaming," passenger Marty Martinez told CNN. Martinez said objects flew out of the hole where the window had exploded, and "passengers right next to her were holding onto (the woman being pulled out). And, meanwhile, there was blood all over this man's hands. He was tending to her." Television images showed that most of the outer casing around the left engine of the Boeing Co. 737-700 had ripped away and a window near the engine on the plane's left side was missing. Boeing said on Twitter that it was aware of the incident and was "gathering more information."

ACTIVISTS CALL FOR REPEAL OF TAX CUTS LEGISLATION AT TAX MARCH

2 House Minority Leader Rep. Nancy Pelosi speaks during a Tax March D.C. event on the U.S. Capitol East Lawn on Tuesday in Washington, D.C. Activists gathered on Capitol Hill to urge "a fair economy that works for all Americans," to "demand" Congress repeal the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act and to "demand" President Donald Trump to release his tax returns.

FAMILY: BARBARA BUSH DIES AT AGE 92

3 Former first lady Barbara Bush, the only woman to see her husband and son sworn in as U.S. president, died on Tuesday, the Bush family said. She was 92. Bush, the wife of former U.S. President George H.W. Bush, was in "failing health" and decided to no longer seek medical treatment, the office of the ex-president said in a statement from Houston on Sunday. CNN reported that Bush was suffering from chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD) and congestive heart failure. A Bush family spokesman said she was being cared for at her home. He did not provide information on the nature of her illness. As first lady from 1989 until the start of 1993, Bush was a popular national figure known for her sometimes blunt talk and self-deprecating wit. Her husband, the 41st president, is 93 years old. Her son, the 43rd president, is 71. Another son, Jeb, is a former governor of Florida who ran unsuccessfully for president in 2015 and early 2016, quitting after a series of lackluster performances highlighted by tough skirmishes with then-candidate Donald Trump. Barbara Bush's work as first lady focused on promoting literacy and reading.

SKETCH RELEASED OF ALLEGED THREAT-MAKER

4 Adult-film actress Stormy Daniels on Tuesday released a sketch of a man she said warned her in 2011 to stop discussing her claims she had a sexual encounter with President Donald Trump, while her lawyer offered a $100,000 reward for information about the man. During an appearance on the daytime ABC television talk show "The View," Daniels repeated her story, first related on CBS' "60 Minutes" last month, that she was on her way to a fitness class with her child when an unknown man approached her in a Las Vegas parking lot in 2011. He warned her to "leave Trump alone. Forget the story," she said in that interview. On Tuesday, her lawyer, Michael Avenatti, asked the public for help identifying the man and offered a $100,000 reward for information leading to his identification.

Harvard Law School profs will represent student arrested by Cambridge police

A Harvard student was arrested by Cambridge police on Friday in an incident that has sparked a conversation about the use of force by officers.

Two professors from the Harvard Law School's Criminal Justice Institute will represent Selorm Ohene, the 21-year-old Harvard student arrested by Cambridge police Friday night.

Ohene's arrest has garnered attention and sparked controversy due to the use of force by officers in restraining Ohene.

Police said Ohene was naked and possibly on drugs and was hostile toward the officers. Officers pinned Ohene to the ground, and a video of the encounter showed an officer striking Ohene in the stomach as the other officers restrained him.

Professors Ronald S. Sullivan Jr. and Dehlia Umunna released a statement Tuesday saying that they are now Ohene's attorneys. Sullivan is the director of the Criminal Justice Institute, which provides hands-on experience for students who represent "indigent adults and juvenile clients facing misdemeanor and felony charges in the Boston criminal courts," according to its website. Umunna is the deputy director.

Ohene, who is studying mathematics at Harvard, is "currently recovering from injuries sustained during his encounter with the Cambridge Police Department," they said in the statement.

Speaking to reporters Monday afternoon, Cambridge Police Commissioner Branville G. Bard Jr. defended the officers, saying that trying to constrain someone against their will is always difficult.

"I absolutely do support the officers," he told reporters, according to WBUR. "I mean, the officers took the actions that they felt necessary at that time. But, once again, I am making no determinations prior to completing a thorough investigation."

> "I mean, the officers took the actions that they felt necessary at that time. But, once again, I am making no determinations prior to completing a thorough investigation."

Bard added that the department may reconsider some of the charges against Ohene, which include indecent exposure, disorderly conduct, assault, resisting arrest and assault and battery on an ambulance personnel.

Ohene's situation has certainly garnered attention, but his lawyers noted that "we do not intend to litigate these matters in the media." The video of the incident "speaks for itself," they added.

"At this time, our focus is on Selorm's health and wellbeing," the statement continued. "We hope that the public will respect his privacy and afford him time and space to heal."

In #MeToo era, BARCC Walk for Change extra special for survivors of sexual assault

This Sunday marks the 12th Walk for Change by the Boston Area Rape Crisis Center. As more survivors speak out because of #MeToo, the event becomes a bigger support system.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

It's gotten easier for Kim Warnick to tell her story. That's not to say it's ever easy to share that you were sexually assaulted by a co-worker, but in the time of #MeToo, it's becoming a little different.

"Three years ago, no one was talking about this, so it's crazy now to be in this sort of new wave of talking about sexual violence in the workplace," Warnick said. "Three years ago … it was really hard to look around and not see any example of that, and not know what I was supposed to do."

That's why Warnick, 26, began sharing her story as a member of the Boston Area Rape Crisis Center (BARCC) Survivor Speakers Bureau; to open people's eyes to the prevalence of sexual assault and to be a beacon to those who had experienced it.

Three years ago, Warnick was raped by a director at the technology marketing company where she then worked as a "much lower level employee." It happened during a work conference, at a hotel where the employees were also all staying.

"… it's crazy now to be in this sort of new wave of talking about sexual violence in the workplace."
Kim Warnick

She reported the rape to both her work and the police a few months afterward, but nothing came of it. The man still works there, Warnick said, and once her company told her the investigation was over and that was it, she quit.

Kim Warnick began receiving services at BARCC and last year attended the Walk for Change for the first time. This Sunday, she'll take part it in again.
DEREK KOUYOUMJIAN

Another higher-up had tried to get her to stay. He didn't know the situation and asked what the company could do to keep her, she said, but when she told him why — that she was raped by an employee who still worked there — "he was floored by that," she said.

He asked who it was, but Warnick felt it was inappropriate to say. So he guessed, and guessed right with no context.

"That always stuck with me, and that's a piece I always share," Warnick said. "Say a colleague of yours tells you they were raped by someone at work, really let that sink in for a minute. What are the stories that pop into your head when you try to solve mystery of who it was? For a lot of people, a lot of moments pop up. … Why don't we do anything about all those other moments?"

More than 1,700 people walked last year, and Warnick thinks more will come out this weekend.

"It's not about bearing witness to a lot of stories — it's a walk and a fundraiser, people play games and there's food trucks and dogs being walked. It's like a festival environment," Warnick said. "It's a really pleasant morning activity, that is just a really warm way to be able to support survivors."

WHEN IS THE BARCC WALK FOR CHANGE?

Massachusetts top court declares stun gun ban unconstitutional

The top court in Massachusetts on Tuesday struck down a state law that banned civilians from possessing stun guns, saying the law violated the U.S. Constitution's Second Amendment, which protects Americans' right to bear arms.

The Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court ruled in the case of a man who was criminally charged for possessing a stun gun, holding that such weapons constitute "arms" protected by the Second Amendment.

"Therefore, under the Second Amendment, the possession of stun guns may be regulated, but not absolutely banned," Chief Justice Ralph Gants wrote for the 6-0 court.

The court dismissed a criminal stun gun possession charge against Jorge Ramirez, who was arrested in 2015 after police discovered one in his pants pocket following a traffic stop. He also was charged with firearms offenses.

The court delayed the effect of its new stun-gun ruling for 60 days to allow lawmakers time to pass related legislation. GETTY IMAGES

The ruling came amid renewed attention to the reach of the Second Amendment after a gunman killed 17 students and staff at a Florida high school in February, prompting a surge of gun control activism by teenage students.

A spokesman for Suffolk County District Attorney Daniel Conley, who defended the law, did not respond to a request for comment. Ramirez's lawyer could not be reached for comment.

The ruling was a change of course for the court, which in 2015 upheld the stun gun ban in the case of a woman who was arrested for possessing one that she said she carried as protection against an abusive former boyfriend.

But in 2016 the U.S. Supreme Court, in an unsigned ruling with no dissents, overturned that holding, finding the Massachusetts ruling was inconsistent with a 2008 Supreme Court decision declaring an individual right to bear arms. REUTERS

New study: Northeast carbon market creating jobs, revenue

The new report comes as the White House moves to weaken federal environmental efforts.

The RGGI — a cap-and-trade scheme adopted in 2009 — has provided a more than 50 percent cut in emissions of carbon dioxide in the region since the RGGI's inception. GETTY IMAGES

Nine states in the U.S. Northeast, including Massachusetts, have slashed greenhouse gas pollution, created thousands of jobs in clean energy, and cut consumer power costs using a market-based scheme to slash carbon emissions, according to a study released on Tuesday.

The report on the Regional Greenhouse Gas Initiative from Boston-based consultancy Analysis Group comes as the Trump administration seeks to unwind federal efforts to fight climate change, arguing they would kill jobs and stifle growth.

The RGGI — a cap-and-trade plan adopted in 2009 — has provided its nine members $1.4 billion in net economic benefits since 2015, according to the study. It has generated more than 14,500 job-years in the renewable energy and efficiency sectors. A job-year is the equivalent of a full-time job for a year.

Those benefits come in addition to a more than 50 percent cut in emissions of carbon dioxide in the region since the RGGI's inception — a trend aided by the retirement of aging fossil-fuel power plants, cheap natural gas, and sluggish demand in the wake of the 2008 financial crisis.

"From a monetary and economic point of view... consumers are a bit better off."
Sue Tierney

"All of the states have benefited from an actual reduction in carbon emissions," Sue Tierney, a senior adviser with Analysis Group, said in an interview last week. "From a monetary and economic point of view … consumers are a bit better off."

The RGGI system, which was meant as a model for other states and countries to join or replicate, seeks to encourage carbon cuts by requiring industries like power plants to acquire tradable permits to cover their emissions. Each year, fewer permits are made available by the states — creating an incentive for businesses to reduce carbon output.

The revenue from the permit sales has amounted to some $2.8 billion since 2009. The revenue goes to the member states, which then invest in programs that support energy efficiency, renewable energy and jobs training, according to the report.

Wholesale power prices in New England averaged roughly $33 per megawatt hour in 2017, among the highest in the country, but still less than half the level in 2008 before RGGI was adopted, according to data from grid operator ISO New England.

$1.4B

The RGGI — a cap-and-trade plan adopted in 2009 — has provided its nine members, all northeastern states, with $1.4 billion in net economic benefits since 2015.

The RGGI states include Connecticut, Delaware, Massachusetts, Maryland, Maine, New Hampshire, New York, Rhode Island and Vermont. New Jersey, an original member, is seeking to rejoin after withdrawing in 2011. REUTERS

U.N. Ambassador Nikki Haley announced new economic sanctions on Russia for its backing of Syrian President Bashar al-Assad, but President Trump reversed course, saying that additional sanctions were unwarranted. GETTY IMAGES

Economic sanctions: What are they and are they actually effective?

Over the weekend, United Nations Ambassador Nikki Haley announced new economic sanctions on Russia for its backing of Syrian President Bashar al-Assad. On Monday, President Trump reversed course, saying that additional sanctions were unwarranted.

Economic sanctions are financial penalties levied by a government against another government, a business or an individual. They could include freezing assets, banning trade or levying tariffs. The goal could be to punish a government for human-rights abuses, deny bad actors money to continue their bad actions, or coerce a government into doing something it doesn't want to do (or stop doing something it wants to keep doing).

Are economic sanctions effective?

The U.S. has enacted sanctions on Russia, Syria and North Korea, yet the underlying issues — Russian belligerence, Assad's civil-rights abuses and North Korea's nuclear program — persist.

"All too often sanctions turn out to be little more than expressions of U.S. preferences that hurt American economic interests without changing the target's behavior for the better," wrote Richard N. Haass of the Brookings Institution.

So why are they increasingly used, if they're not effective? "There is nothing else between words and military action if you want to bring pressure upon a government," said Jeremy Greenstock, former British ambassador to the U.N. MICHAEL MARTIN

Amy Schumer's 'I Feel Pretty' producer fights back against trailer backlash

Mary Viola insists the Amy Schumer comedy "shows what a little bit of confidence can do."

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

When the trailer for "I Feel Pretty" was initially released there was more than a little discontent, as some viewers immediately decided that the comedy would be insulting and offensive to women.

That couldn't be further from the truth. I recently had the chance to speak to "I Feel Pretty's" producer Mary Viola, and she revealed that this reaction to the clip left those involved stunned,disappointed and completely missed the point of the film.

How did you first get involved in "I Feel Pretty"?
I met with its writers and directors and the script had a great message, but it wasn't overly preachy. That's something that audiences can usually sniff out. We then sent the script to Amy Schumer, who this was really written for. It was really one of the best experiences that I've had getting a movie made.

What was the message that attracted you then?
That it's inside that counts. And now more than ever that's what needs to come through. Because everybody struggles with self-esteem. Even people that are stunning. Everyone is insecure. We all have feelings of inadequacy. This movie shows what a little bit of confidence can do.

Could anyone else have played Renee?
I don't think that anyone else could have done this to the degree that she does. She pulls it off 100 percent. It was amazing to watch her on set. Because she'd have to change from confident Renee to unconfident Renee every other hour. I'm sure it was grueling, but she never said a word and was great.

> "I do love stories of female empowerment."
> Producer Mary Viola

When did Amy Schumer get involved?
We brought her on as a producer shortly after she read the script. She worked on the script, too, but then I really wanted her creative input throughout. And she really earned those producing stripes. I just can't say enough great things about her. A lot of her came into the project. She was able to take on her insecurities. She talks about it a lot how when we are little girls we have all of the confidence in the world, but then over time people just wear you down and we lose that.

How did you feel about the backlash to the trailer?
I was really disappointed in that reaction. It was a few comments that wound up turning into more of a story than it really was. Because I really like the early trailers.

It was always going to be the case that the film wouldn't have a negative message.
I wish people would wait to comment until they've seen something. If you want to judge the film after you've watched it that is absolutely your prerogative. But to do so after a 30 second spot that wasn't intended to create that response was disappointing. Especially because Amy Schumer, Aidy Bryant, a female director and female producers are involved. The female force behind the movie was intentional. Early screenings have cleared that up. Because the film couldn't be more inspiring and uplifting.

"I Feel Pretty" will be released on April 20.

The Ghost Walks is Boston's hippest new cocktail lounge and restaurant

There truly isn't anything like The Ghost Walks in Boston's theater district.

Set to officially open April 25, the hip cocktail lounge and restaurant is the brainchild of the team behind hotspots like Committee and Bijou and is even located in the space beneath the nightclub on Stuart Street. While general manager Peter Szigeti hopes to draw in the theater crowds — the venue's name is an homage to the ghost of Hamlet's father — he doesn't want guests to think of The Ghost Walks as your typical addition to the area's food and drink scene.

"We don't want to be called a restaurant; we also don't want to be called a bar," Szigeti says. "We kind of want to be that experience that just hovers in between."

He adds, "I think Boston desperately needs something that's not labeled."

To accomplish this goal, the team has come up with a concept that offers fresh takes on all the classics, especially when it comes to the drink program. Szigeti has created a fun and funky cocktail menu with a theatrical spin, featuring items like the Paparazzi, a tequila-style drink that comes in a camera lens shaped glass, as well as the Box Office, a sweet bourbon cocktail that's served inside a popcorn sleeve and topped with fresh popcorn.

Truly worthy of an Instagram. PROVIDED

The Ghost Walks also has "hot off the press" cocktails, an array of highball drinks that are created using a bit of heavy machinery. A three-ton arbor press is used to widen a soda can so that a chilled nip bottle can be poured into it. The idea is to eliminate the need for ice so that the cocktails don't become watered down.

"Normally the last sip of the drink would be like water," Szigeti says. "In this case, the first sip is like soda and the last sip will finish strong, so you get more for your buck."

Another highlight from the drink program is the champagne vending machine, the first of its kind on the East Coast, according to Szigeti. Guests can sip on individual, 6-ounce bottles of bubbly by purchasing tokens for the machine at the bar.

As far as bites go, chef Aaron Lhamon has put together a limited but tasty menu that Szigeti describes as "brilliantly designed comfort food that people love."

paccio, made with kaffir emulsion, sweet red pepper, cured yolk and lemon confit, as well as Lhamon's spin on his grandmother's Boston baked beans, which are made with chickpeas instead of beans. Larger plate offerings range from gnocchi to duck l'orange.

"The menu is influenced heavily on a whimsical thought, so fun things that we want to play with," Lhamon says. "I just have fun with it. The whole menu is a play on enjoying ourselves."

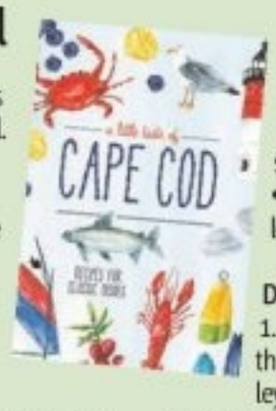
Guests who're in the know can order from the secret "ghost" menu too. Although items may vary from time to time, Lhamon's mouth-watering, signature burger will likely be a staple. Fans can also expect a variety of cocktail and dessert offerings, plus dishes like the lobster cigar, which Szigeti calls "a lobster roll like I haven't seen before."

"The ghost menu is something that nobody will ever see or read, but it's always going to be available," Szigeti says. "You got to know about it, you got to ask."

How to make lobster rolls like a Cape Cod native

There are few dishes that are as quintessentially New England as the lobster roll. Whether you like them warmed up and drenched in butter Connecticut-style, or prefer the cold and mayo-topped Maine version of the dish, nothing beats the beloved crustacean-filled sandwich. Learn how to make lobster rolls like a true Massachusetts native with this recipe excerpt from local chef and food writer Annie B. Copps' new cookbook "A Little Taste of Cape Cod: Recipes for Classic Dishes." MATT JUUL

Lobster Roll



There are many ways to make a lobster roll. This one is straightforward, with no mucking about—the point is to be able to taste the lobster, the distinct sweet flavor of which is also subtle and shouldn't get lost among stronger flavors or too much mayonnaise. It is important to use New England–style hot-dog buns. These soft, straight-sided, flat-bottomed rolls are ideal for buttering and toasting on both sides, which lends a lot of flavor and texture to the lobster roll.

Makes six sandwiches

- 2 pounds cooked lobster meat, coarsely chopped
- 3 tablespoons chopped fresh flat-leaf parsley
- 3 tablespoons coarsely chopped fresh celery leaves
- About 3/4 cup mayonnaise
- 2 tablespoons unsalted butter, at room temperature
- 6 New England–style hot-dog buns
- 6 large butter (Bibb) lettuce leaves

Directions:

1. In a bowl, combine the lobster meat, parsley, and celery leaves. Add half of the mayonnaise, fold gently to combine, and taste. The lobster should be the predominant flavor, but there should be (just) enough mayonnaise to hold the ingredients together; add more mayonnaise if necessary.
2. Spread the butter on both sides of the hot-dog buns. In a large sauté pan over medium heat, toast the buns, turning once, until deeply browned on both sides, about 2 minutes per side. Lay a lettuce leaf inside each bun and divide the lobster mixture evenly among them. Serve right away.

APRIL NFL DRAMA

There's been great hoopla around here in the past few days regarding Tom Brady and Rob Gronkowski both missing voluntary team workouts as this Brady and Gronk vs. Belichick grudge will either mean the end of the Patriots' dynasty or it will mean absolutely nothing in the long run. Stay tuned.

The fact of the matter here though is this drama is just not out out of the ordinary in the NFL. It's just out of the ordinary for the Patriots.

Look at Green Bay and superstar QB Aaron Rodgers (nearly as big a star as Brady) for example. Rodgers, apparently frustrated with a lack of communication from the Packers front office regarding personnel moves this offseason, hinted this week that he could play elsewhere when his contract is up.

It's April, and that means NFL players are doing one of three things: 1. lifting weights; 2. smoking weed (according to Martellus Bennett); or 3. Bitching about their contract.

GOOD SEATS AVAILABLE

The good news for the Red Sox: TV ratings are up as the team is off to its best start in its 118-year history.

The bad news is that Fenway is far from a lock sell-out anymore.

According to Yahoo Sports' Jeff Passan, the Sox are "down about 2,500 fans a game."

Now, it's early. And the weather has been crap in Boston. But this is becoming a trend in all of sports. Seriously – what is the point of going to Fenway or any other sports venue more than one time per year? Why shell out $200 for three (or four) hours of action in a plastic seat when you can get better views on TV anyway?

Of course this will all change when the weather gets nice and rest-assured the suits at Fenway know this too as they aren't lowering ticket prices anytime soon. A field box seat — a decent but not great seat — at Fenway for the Sox' next home game (a Friday night affair against the Rays) is going for a cool $131 right now at RedSox.com. Bleacher seats? $31.

DO PATS WANT DEZ?

The Patriots typically avoid the mad rush at the start of NFL free agency each year in order to make a run at talented players who are later released. Dez Bryant fits the criteria, but it remains to be seen if the Patriots truly are interested. So long as they don't get into a bidding war with another team — which could very well happen given Bryant's talent and that he's on the right side of 30 years old — the Pats could make a run at him.

ESPN's Mike Reiss wrote recently about Dez' motivations and how that will translate into whether or not the Pats will bite.

"If [Dez] is looking for maximum dollars, my sense is that wouldn't fit with the Patriots," Reiss wrote. "But if he was willing to take a short-term contract at around $4 million per season (aligned with top-paid receiver Julian Edelman), perhaps the Patriots would at least consider it."

As for the competition the Patriots face — they do have a slightly better short-term cap situation than the Eagles and Giants, right now. Bryant said when he left Dallas that he wants to stay in the NFC East in order to get revenge on the Cowboys but it's unclear if that was simply in-the-moment hostility. Initially it was thought that Bryant had his eyes on joining the reigning Super Bowl champs in Philly, but he dropped a hint on Tuesday that the Giants were actually his preferred destination.

LEBRON CAN'T WIN WITHOUT KYRIE

In all likelihood, the Celtics are not winning the Eastern Conference without Kyrie Irving. But C's fans can take some solace with the likelihood that LeBron James and the Cleveland Cavaliers can't either.

Look, LeBron is one of the greatest players of all-time. I'm not even close to ready to say he's as good as Michael Jordan was, but he is great. That said, even the greats need elite help. Scottie Pippen was elite help for Jordan. Dwyane Wade was elite help for LeBron in Miami, and Kyrie was elite help for LeBron in Cleveland. LeBron slurps love to point out that he's been to the Finals seven straight times. Well, he's needed elite help each of those times — and this year he's another year older.

Kevin Love has never really fit as a complementary player to LeBron — as evidenced by his nine-point effort in Cleveland's 98-80 Game 1 home loss to Indiana on Sunday. So, LeBron will have to go at it this postseason mostly by himself. He's still good enough to do it by himself for a round or two. But three rounds? Winning a game against the Warriors or Rockets?

Not happening.
